

Personal reflection

BY Viktor Velizarov

This semester was a big learning point for me. The project helped me significantly not only in my programming skills but also in a communicational point of view. How to conduct a proper user research was a crucial part of making a good website and that is what this project showed me, without a good research the goals for the website are not clear, the things I have learned from the research helped me not only in the project but also in the other classes that we have. Me and my group conducted excessive research which made me put myself in the point of view of our client and also in the potential customers that will use the website and look into detail how the user will encounter the features in our website. This project showed me that my teamwork needed some improvement and I had to work more on my communication skills. Writing a good documentation was essential that why from the start of the semester till now there were a lot of corrections in its process with the feedback we received from which I learned how to write better documentations for the future. Another big learning point for me was how to make a proper testing of the final product and to extract as much as possible from it the feedback from the testing showed me where a change has to be made in order to improve the user experience.

Overall, this semester was full of new things for me especially working with real client how they had their own requirements which we had to fulfil in order to make the best product possible. I would say it was a fun and challenging experience for me with the things I have learned which will be essential for me in the future of my education and also in the industry.
